“Barbara was a very special person in my life. She was my secretary starting in 1973 until 2014 with the exception of only a year or two when she went off to (I think) Venezuela. She was there for me through both the good times and the bad times and she will be much missed.

Many years ago, a client gave me a diary he found in an old abandoned house. It included a sentiment written in 1851 written by one friend upon the end of a visit by another. Barbara always like it. It certainly captures how I feel.

There is always a deep sadness blended with those simple words. One finds it hard to throw aside a faded wild flower with whose bloom pleasant thoughts were associated, and tears will often dim the last, lingering look cast upon a landscape whose beauties have become familiar to the eye.

How much more than when one is called upon to part from friends with whom we have held the sweet intercourse of kindly feeling for a time! When the sad thought is forced upon us that we may see no more the eye whose glance has spoken eloquently from a loving heart, nor hear again the sweet tones of affection.

But a light shineth in the darkness; not fitful or of uncertain brilliancy, but gleaming steadily and clearly; and our hearts are cheered by the thought that this parting will not be forever, even with regard to time. That at some future and perhaps not very far distant period we shall meet again on earth.

This hope may prove delusive, yet have we a higher, holier, truer one to relieve our sadness: it is that no parting such as this need be forever - that when the last look of earthly affection can cheer our hearts no more, we may enjoy the perfect love of Heaven - and that, in a short space, ties riven by time may be reunited never again to

May it be our great object in life to keep this hope pure and steadfast in our hearts!"
