“ Lloyd Cole was a very important part of our survival for the many years HA Turner and I lived in our house on Route 488/La Plata Road. He had worked for years for HA's dad on the farm, but we came to depend on him after my father-in-law stopped actively farming. Lloyd had been a very skilled employee on the farm; then he became the person we depended on to help with skinning and hanging deer, getting our firewood supply each fall, helping with the summer garden, with the landscaping, with so much of the work around our house. He was almost tireless, always honest and always reliable. He understood motors and kept the tractors running. He knew how to assemble equipment. He had high standards and wouldn't be satisfied with sloppy work. If he died at nearly 95, he was still doing plenty of tough, physical labor for us well into his 70s. The last time I saw him was in 2011, when I visited Doris and Lloyd at their Waldorf apartment. He'd gone through changes from living on the Cole family "heir property" as he called it, on Bel Alton-Newtown Road. Rest in your deserved peace, you dear old friend.
