“ I became friends with Wayne about the time he bought his brand new, midnight blue, '61 Chevy Bel Air hardtop. I remember going to his parents' house, meeting his mom and seeing some of his art work, including packaging graphics for a new board game being developed by a friend. His use of scratch board was part of his job at the Navy Yard. The work he produced was top-notch professional. He also hand-lettered the names on several cars back in the day. There, too, his professional touch made his work stand out. But, what I most recall about Wayne was that he was such a nice person. I had the pleasure of a phone call with him perhaps 3 years ago. That was our first contact in decades. I cherish that I took the time to call Wayne. He was a good man.

I send my most sincere condolences to his loved ones.
